How each one works

STRC Strategy · Stretch

- Next Record date for the Oct 31 payment ($0.50/share)
- Source Strategy 8-K, Oct 1, 2026; 10-Q Q2 2026

STRF Strategy · Strife

- Next Q4 dividend not declared yet (scheduled pay date Dec 31)
- Source Strategy 10-Q Q2 2026

- Next Q4 dividend not declared yet (scheduled pay date Dec 31)

Six ideas that explain every preferred

Par and stated rate

Each share has a $100 reference amount. The stated rate is paid on that $100, not on what you paid. 10% stated = $10 a year per share.

Effective yield

Buy below $100 and you earn more than the stated rate on your money; buy above and you earn less. That is why STRD and STRK show higher effective yields.

Cumulative vs non-cumulative

Cumulative (STRF, STRC, STRK, SATA): a skipped dividend is owed later. Non-cumulative (STRD): a skipped dividend is gone. That difference is a big part of STRD's higher yield.

Seniority

The order of claims if the company is wound up. STRF is first among Strategy's preferreds, STRD last; all preferreds rank ahead of common stock and behind debt.

Fixed vs variable

Fixed-rate series move with interest rates and credit risk, so their price can drift far from $100. Variable-rate series (STRC, SATA) have their rate adjusted to keep the price near $100.

Conversion

Only STRK converts into common stock (0.1 MSTR per share), so it also moves with MSTR. The others are pure income instruments.

Risks to understand: dividends must be declared by the board; prices can fall well below par; fixed-rate series lose value when rates rise; all of these depend on the issuer's ability to raise capital and on the bitcoin price.
